Cottonelle® Partners with Actor and Comedian Ken Jeong as Brand’s First-Ever "Assverter" to Encourage Consumers to Get Real About Down There Care

June 28, 2023

Jeong and Cottonelle® are searching for those bold enough to talk openly and honestly about their down there situation in exchange for a $10,000 cash prize to normalize these conversations and show how Cottonelle® can be a solution.

CHICAGO. June 28, 2023 /PRNewswire/ -- Cottonelle® is partnering with actor, comedian, and former physician, Ken Jeong, to help spread awareness for down there care and ignite a search for consumers willing to share their situation down there. The Kimberly-Clark U.S. brand is expanding its traditional advertising methods to introduce a new type of advertising - "Assvertising" - to show Cottonelle® understands people’s unique situation down there and ensure consumers have the confidence to seek out care with Cottonelle®. With Jeong as its first-ever "Assverter", Cottonelle® will select four individuals to also become brand ambassadors (“Assvertisers”) in exchange for $10,000 each.

Other toilet paper brands solely talk about being soft and strong, while Cottonelle focuses on real consumer needs the brand's suite of products help address (such as hard-to-clean, sensitive, steamy or swampy) instead of having people just deal with uncomfortable situations. The brand believes everyone deserves the right kind of care down there and understands many people can be embarrassed to discuss their own needs. That's why Cottonelle® has partnered with Ken Jeong to talk directly to consumers about their needs and identify its first-ever team of Assvertisers.

To apply to be an Assverter, consumers can visit cottonelle.com/assverter now through July 26 and submit a video personally describing their down there situation in a clever but clean way, i.e., "my down there is messier than text messages after midnight."

- Four applicants will be selected as a Cottonelle® Assverter, one to represent each of the most common down there situations - steamy, sensitive, hard to clean, and swampy. Assvertisers will be notified if they are chosen via email in mid-August, 2023.
- Assvertisers will receive $10,000 each and become a literal walking billboard - wearing an exclusive pair of Cottonelle® joggers in public this summer and encouraging consumers to talk more openly about down there care by creating social content for the brand in their joggers.
- Assvertisers will be expected to strut their joggers in public, develop social content, start down there care conversations and more.¹ For more details visit cottonelle.com/assverter.

"I encourage you to apply to join me as a Cottonelle Assverter," said Ken Jeong. "Everyone, everywhere has a down there situation, whether they want to admit it or not. As a former doctor, I want to encourage you to share your story, because what you’re experiencing is most likely normal! Through this partnership with Cottonelle® I hope to show you why we should open up about these issues, and so everyone can find Cottonelle® products that work for their down there."

"Many consumers don’t understand that they can find solutions to their down there situation in the toilet paper aisle," said Elizabeth Metz, North American Vice President of Cottonelle® at Kimberly-Clark. "Cottonelle® has a full suite of products that speak to the various situations all of our down therees have, whether we are steamy, sensitive, hard to clean, or swampy, and we hope our first-ever Assvertisers can help us normalize the conversation around down there care and shine light on the solutions."

Earlier this year, Cottonelle launched the Cottonelle® DownThereCare™ creative campaign, featuring four TV spots highlighting characters who are talking about their individual needs to spotlight how its products address real consumer “down there” needs in addition to delivering on category norms like softness and strength.
